A former Governor of the National Academy of Arbitrators (NAA), Ms. Drucker is named as a permanent arbitrator under dozens of collective bargaining agreements in the public and private sectors and has served as a labor arbitrator in a vast array of industries throughout the country. She also arbitrates ERISA and MPPAA matters. In addition, Ms. Drucker has extensive experience arbitrating employment and commercial cases that arise under various ADR systems and pursuant to individual contracts. She has decided all forms of statutory discrimination claims involving employees ranging from clerks and laborers to CEOs and lawyers, and she has handled FLSA collective actions, class actions, and whistleblower claims. Ms. Drucker has heard hundreds of cases involving alleged breaches of individual employment contracts, non-compete clauses, trade-secret provisions, severance plans, and anti-poaching restrictions.

Arbitrator Drucker is on the adjunct faculty of Cornell University School of Industrial and Labor Relations and the Scheinman Institute on Conflict Resolution, where she previously served for several years as the Director of Programs for Neutrals. She was the designer of and lead instructor for the AAA's first nationwide training program for its Employment Arbitration Panel and was a lead trainer for the AAA's 2002-2006 advanced training program for employment arbitrators. Ms. Drucker twice traveled to The Republic of Panamá to present week-long training programs that she developed, at the request of that country's government, for its arbitrators and mediators.

During her 30-year career in employment law and labor relations, Ms. Drucker practiced law on the management side, spent several years working as a union lobbyist, and, before relocating to Manhattan in 1990, served as the General Counsel, Vice Chair, and Executive Director of the then-newly formed Ohio Employment Relations Board. She is admitted to the practice of law in New York, Ohio, the Supreme Court of the United States, and various federal courts.

Ms. Drucker has written and lectured extensively on arbitration, employment law, and labor law. She is the immediate past Chair of the NY Metropolitan Region of the National Academy of Arbitrators.
