

Biography – Ryan S. Copple, Esq.

Mr. Copple began his education by obtaining a bachelor's degree, with a major in Finance from the University of Florida in 1994. He then went on to obtain both his master's degree in business administration and juris doctor from Nova Southeastern University in 1998. He subsequently practiced complex commercial litigation for several well-known law firms until 2009, at which time, he formed his own law firm now known as Copple Sachs Copple, P.A. Since then, he has managed to maintain a vibrant and successful law practice.

Mr. Copple has also successfully mediated cases for over 15 years as a certified circuit court mediator. While he focuses his mediation practice on handling homeowners and condominium association disputes, he also handles disputes concerning real estate, construction, code violations, breach of contract, collections, evictions, ejectments, specific performance, foreclosures, insurance, declaratory and other equitable relief, as well as other complex civil litigation matters.

While serving as both a mediator and the managing partner of Copple Sachs Copple P.A., Mr. Copple has also lectured in continuing legal education for landlord and tenant obligations in Florida, and for property managers and boards of directors regarding various condominium and homeowners' association matters. Mr. Copple is board certified in condominium and planned development law.
