HONORABLE JACKIE GLASS, ret.
Las Vegas, Nevada

Retired District Court Judge Jackie Glass most recently hosted the nationally syndicated television court show Swift Justice with Jackie Glass. The cases were all real cases from around the country with the participants agreeing to participate in televised binding arbitrations. She retired from the bench in May of 2011, after 8/12 years. Elected in 2002, Judge Glass was assigned both criminal and civil cases. She is known for her work in several high profile trials including the Las Vegas criminal case State of Nevada v. O. J. Simpson.

Judge Glass served as a part of the leadership team at the Eighth Judicial District Court. She served as a member of the Executive committee representing the Specialty Court programs. Glass helped create the Clark County Mental Health Court in 2003, in an effort to improve how the criminal justice system deals with mental illness. She also established a task force to gauge whether a person is competent to stand trial, leading to the creation of the Clark County Competency Court in 2005.

During her last year on the bench, Glass oversaw Clark County District's drug and alcohol treatment courts. These influential courts provide therapeutic supervision and treatment for defendants with serious substance addictions.

Judge Glass actively participated in the court's settlement conference program. Not only volunteering to handle settlement conferences, but was a much sought after settlement judge, with an outstanding track record for getting cases settled.

Before she was elected to the judgeship, she spent 18 years as a lawyer, including 12 years at Wolfson & Glass, a criminal defense firm she founded with her husband and now current Clark County District Attorney Steve Wolfson.

Judge Glass began her career in Las Vegas as a journalist and as a result of covering the courts for KTNV-TV, she decided to go to law school. She attended the University of San Diego School of Law and graduated in 1984.
